PRP for Skin & Hair

Healthy skin and hair are a sign of a healthy body. As the name suggests, PRP is a natural substance found in the human blood cells. It's packed with growth factors that are instrumental in enhancing the development and health of multiple types of cells in the body. One of the main purposes of using PRP is hair restoration and skin rejuvenation.

If you've experienced significant hair loss, PRP can be of help in a few ways. PRP treatments can promote the health of shrinking hair follicles, lead to a slowing down of hair loss. In some cases, you can even have new hair growth after effective PRP treatment.

PRP helps to stimulate collagen production, which is a natural protein found in the body that maintains the skin's plumpness. PRP can be used to restore the fresh, youthful look of skin by stimulating collagen production. Similar to hair restoration, this can be done in different ways. PRP can be injected along with facial fillers into target areas to reduce wrinkling.

Puffy or swollen eyes can be caused by: Water retention, stress, allergies, hay fever, hormonal changes, alcohol consumption and high sodium intake. Flying and lack of sleep are other contributors.

Chemical Peel

Chemical peels are cosmetic treatments that can be applied to the face, hands, and neck. Chemical peels can improve the skin appearance or feel of the skin. During this procedure, chemical solutions will be applied to the area being treated, which causes the skin to exfoliate and eventually peel off. Once this happens, the new skin underneath is often smoother, appears less wrinkled, and may have less damage.

After a chemical peel, skin is temporarily more sensitive to the sun, so wear sunscreen every day.
